

Modern Drunkard's Field Guide to YOUR DRINKING MASK

We Can Drink Through This!

Hoisting the Flag

Putting your straw at full mast informs the bartender: "I'm ready for a drink."

The Propeller of Proof

Difficult to execute while drunk, this maneuver is a way of showing the bartender that you are indeed still able to fly.

The Round Wand

Pointing your straw at the drinker to your left or right asserts: "I'd like to buy this person a round."

The Spartan Spear

With the bendy part fully extended, this ruffian's straw thrusts rudely forward, demanding attention. Use sparingly.

Giving Up the Ship

With his straw reversed and pointing dejectedly downward, this gent is signaling he's ready for his tab.

Slant Drilling

This audacious pirate has connected two straws so as to clandestinely feast upon the drink of an unsuspecting neighbor.

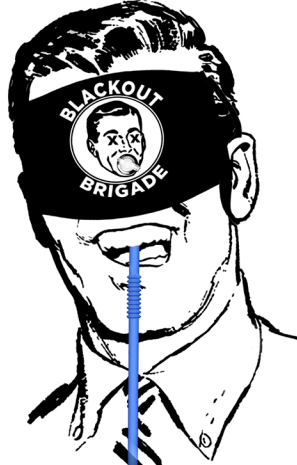

Cocktails in the Hammock

Perhaps thinking he's still drinking in his backyard, this scoundrel reckons his mask is merely a hammock for his chin.

Chaos Theory

Since everyone is wearing a mask, this cynic wonders why she shouldn't be allowed to enjoy a delicious smoky joe?

Flying Blind

Taking his membership in the The Brigade a bit too literally, this foolish fellow is heading for a bumpy flight.
